AP-35 Projects – 91.220(d)

Introduction

The City starts its fourth year of its five-year strategic plan building on the strengths of using systems to implement many projects funded with Con Plan dollars. The City chooses projects that complement its overall strategy of reducing homelessness, increasing the stock of affordable housing, and improving livability. These systems include: The Affordable Housing Managed Pipeline, Aging Services Delivery System, BusinessSource System, FamilySource System, and the Domestic Violence and Human Trafficking system. The City works closely with various nonprofit subrecipients, developers, general contractors, various City departments, local government entities (e.g., the school district), agencies in the County, or state and local financing (e.g., bonds), to implement the various projects. Businesses selected for economic development assistance are vetted through an underwriting process implemented by the Economic and Workforce Development Department.

Table 1 - Project Information

Describe the reasons for allocation priorities and any obstacles to addressing underserved needs

The City of Los Angeles acknowledges the hardships of its residents; as such, it is committed to reducing and preventing homelessness, displacement, and crisis experiences as well as providing opportunities for low-income stakeholders to prosper with living wage jobs, livable neighborhoods, and services that enhance their lives. Projects that directly or mostly address these goals are prioritized.

Geographically, projects that seek to uplift locations with high concentrations of lower-income individuals are also granted priority. Areas with high concentrations of homeless individuals, the two federally-designated Promise Zones, and the Racially/Ethnically Concentrated Areas of Poverty (R/ECAPs) are all locations that are granted priority, as projects in those areas would offer the most impact for residents with low-to-moderate income. While not defined the same, there is great overlap of all three types of areas within certain parts of the city.

Obstacle of Cost-Burdened Renters

The majority of city residents are renters, and nearly 73% of households pay more than 30% of their gross monthly income for housing costs, with 48% being severely rent-burdened, paying over 50% of their income for housing alone. Because so many renters in Los Angeles are cost-burdened, a great number of Angelenos are at risk of losing their housing and possibly entering homelessness. LAHSA 2020 data shows there are over 28,000 people unsheltered, and a total of 41,290 homeless people in the City of Los Angeles, which is a significant increase of 16%.

While the City is building new affordable housing, it must also contend with properties not renewing affordability contracts, old affordable housing being demolished for market-rate properties, affordable housing falling into disrepair, and the perpetually rising cost of living in Los Angeles. The City has adopted a Housing First strategy, and sees lack of affordable housing as a key obstacle. L.A. needs 509,000 new affordable housing units to meet current demand (CA Housing Partnership 2020 report). Creating more affordable housing also faces a multitude of obstacles including NIMBYism, rising development costs, and finite funding.

Obstacle of Racial Inequity

Systemic racism leads to a disproportionate number of black people becoming homeless in L.A. County, where 8% of the overall population is black, but black people represent 34% of those experiencing homelessness.²

Obstacle of Experiencing Homelessness & Maintaining Employment

As rents and home prices rise faster than incomes, the longstanding mismatch of incomes and housing costs continues. Additionally, L.A.'s inadequate housing supply, systemic racism and income inequality are driving inflows to homelessness. Renters in LA County need to earn $41.96 per hour — 2.8 times the City of L.A. minimum wage — to afford the average monthly asking rent of $2,182. When people are at-risk of becoming or are homeless, chances for survival in the workplace is diminished, due to inadequate access to proper hygiene facilities and proper rest in a safe place, and related matters. To address these needs, numerous homeless assistance organizations offer job skills training and job placement for their clients to help them achieve stable employment, which is a pillar to maintaining secure housing, while also working to ensure clients achieve stable housing, which is a pillar to maintaining secure employment.

Obstacles for Older Adults

According to the LAHSA 2020 Homeless Count - Older Adult Homeless, the older adults 55+ vulnerable homeless population of 14,896 increased 20 percent from 2017 to 2020. Various factors such as housing insecurity, increasing healthcare costs, and other economic stressors can lead older adults into homelessness. Economic hardship such as eviction, foreclosure and unemployment were reasons cited for loss of housing by 50 percent of unsheltered older adults. Other reasons cited were weak social networks such as separations, conflicts with household members, no friends/family available - 30%, and disabling health conditions, such as physical illness, mental health issues, and drug use - 20%.³

Obstacles for Domestic Violence & Human Trafficking Survivors

Survivors of domestic violence often find themselves without a roof over their heads after experiencing tumultuous relationships, and there is a need to prevent the downfall from domestic violence to homelessness. When seeking safe and quality housing, they are often challenged with being denied due to lack of proper identity, poor credit, no past rental history because their name does not appear on leases. There is a need for funding with more flexible requirements to provide housing assistance for this population. Also of concern is how domestic violence survivors are viewed by society.

Likewise, human trafficking survivors are faced with similar circumstances and often experience homelessness from encountering criminal records due to the activities previously forced upon them. Human traffickers force victims to break the law, and these criminal records can often take months to expunge. These same barriers hinder victims while seeking employment, making it more difficult to become independent from the abuser. While a City funded shelter for human trafficking survivors was established in 2018, due to the safety requirements, survivors are sometimes unable to meet certain criteria of the emergency and transitional shelters. And the need far outweighs current capacity.

While Los Angeles faces a myriad of obstacles, the City will rise to the challenge and face any obstacles as it has done many times in the past.

Project Summary Information

#	Information	Answer
1	Project Name	Accelerating Blue Future
	Target Area
	Goals Supported	Improve local economy for low income residents
	Needs Addressed	Opportunities for low-income families to prosper
	Funding	CDBG: $170,000
	Description	The incubator would provide entrepreneurs training and support in the Blue Economy (sustainable use of ocean resources) and would provide six months of additional startup support services. The topics covered in trainings include, market segmentation, market channels, product development, market analysis, competitive understanding, ideation around customer acceptance, and customer profiles. The goal would be to help entrepreneurs refine topics into products to be sold and marketed. CDBG funds would be used to build the program structure, implement an outreach campaign to prospective startups, and enroll cohorts of entrepreneurs into the program.

Rationale for the priorities for allocating investments geographically

The City is not following a delimited geographic investment plan, but certain programs and projects may be prioritized according to their location in the following areas:

Homeless Population

According to the 2020 Greater LA Homeless Count, homelessness increased at a rate of 16.1% in the City of Los Angeles to a population of 41,290. There were 12,438 sheltered homeless persons, and 28,852 unsheltered persons.

South Los Angeles has experienced the highest concentration of chronic homelessness, with a significant increase in the region at above 72%.

City of Los Angeles Promise Zones

The city has two federally-designated Promise Zones (PZs): The Los Angeles Promise Zone in Central LA, approved in January 2013, and the South Los Angeles Transit Empowerment Zone approved in June 2016. The areas are targeted with comprehensive neighborhood revitalization efforts to achieve the goals of improving educational opportunities, creating jobs, increasing economic development, improving public safety, leveraging private capital, preserving and expanding affordable housing and reducing poverty. The PZs demonstrate the effectiveness of cross-sector collaboration and achieve goals by coordinating investments between the public and private sectors, strengthening interdepartmental working relationships, and connecting with the philanthropic, nonprofit, and academic communities. The ultimate goal of the PZ is to create a dynamic, safe, and livable community with high academic achievement and strong economic growth over the ten-year implementation period and beyond. PZ programs that align with this Plan include the support of small business and entrepreneurship and the Homeless Youth Summit.

Racially/Ethnically Concentrated Areas of Poverty (R/ECAPs) and Neighborhoods of Opportunity

The 2017 Assessment of Fair Housing analyzed a variety of fair housing issues including patterns of integration and segregation of members of protected classes; racially or ethnically concentrated areas of poverty (R/ECAPs) within Los Angeles and the region; disparities in access to opportunity in education, employment, transportation, environmental health, and exposure to poverty; and disproportionate housing needs. R/ECAPs are based on census tracts and defined by HUD as, “areas with a non-White population of 50% or more,” and where “40% or more of individuals live at or below the poverty limit or has a poverty rate three times the average poverty rate of the metropolitan area, whichever threshold is lower.” While many areas within the city meet the criteria for R/ECAPs, the vast majority of these R/ECAPs are clustered in Central, South, and East LA. South Los Angeles accounts for a particularly large proportion of city residents living in census tracts with extreme rates of poverty. In 2010, 387,914 people lived in areas classified as R/ECAPs, which was slightly more than 10% of the city’s population as of that date.

The AFH describes neighborhoods of opportunity that have proficient schools, low poverty rates, and better environmental health scores, as shown on the maps included in this section. Those maps also show that the R/ECAPs, outlined in red, are far from the neighborhoods of opportunity. The AFH calls for greater access to neighborhoods of opportunity by lower income residents of the city and for increased investment in R/ECAPs.

Discussion

The needs for Con Plan-funded assistance are citywide and the opportunities are also citywide. As the 2017 AFH discusses, where one lives has a substantial effect on mental and physical health, education, crime levels, and economic opportunity. Urban areas that are more residentially segregated by race and income tend to have lower levels of upward economic mobility than other areas. Concentrated poverty is also associated with higher crime rates and worse health outcomes. However, these areas may also offer some opportunities as well. Individuals may actively choose to settle in neighborhoods containing R/ECAPs due to the availability of affordable housing and proximity to job centers. Overall, identifying R/ECAPs is important to better understand entrenched patterns of segregation and poverty. The R/ECAP areas and other areas of greatest need may be prioritized in considering the allocation of investments.
